CHAIR’S MESSAGE

There are various ways to measure the health and vitality of an academic department. We need to be offering diverse classes that are well taught to a steadily increasing number of students. Our faculty need to be conducting research and producing publications that stimulate scholarly debates. We need to secure funds to support our students and to conduct our research. The most important responsibility we have is to ensure that we recruit the best possible scholars to our faculty to guarantee that today’s efforts will pay off for many years to come.

In faculty recruitment, scholars who have recently earned their doctorates offer the richest opportunity to both better meet our teaching and research commitments today and to ensure that we only get better in the future. In the Department of Chicano/Latino Studies (DCLS), we have recruited three excellent junior scholars over the past three years: Cynthia Feliciano, Deborah R. Vargas, and Michael Montoya. I will quickly review their research interests and recent publications to demonstrate what I believe will be a bright future for the Department.

Assistant Professor Cynthia Feliciano holds a Ph.D. in Sociology from the University of California, Los Angeles. She joined the Departments of Chicano/Latino Studies and Sociology at UCI in 2004 after holding a University of California President’s Postdoctoral Fellowship. Her research focuses on immigration, education, and race/ethnic relations. In 2006, she saw the publication of her first book: Unequal Origins: Immigrant Selection and the Education of the Second Generation (LFB Scholarly Publishing). She has also published in Demography, the International Migration Review, and Ethnic and Racial Studies, each of which is the leading journal in its field.

Assistant Professor Deborah R. Vargas was part of the same class of U.C. President’s Postdoctoral Fellows as Assistant Professor Feliciano. She began her fellowship after completing a Ph.D. in Sociology at the University of California, Santa Cruz. Vargas’ research concentrates on cultural studies, popular culture, Chicana/Latina cultural production, and racialized sexualities. She has published in Frontiers: A Journal of Women’s Studies, the Encyclopedia of Latina and Latino Popular Culture in the United States, and the Oxford Encyclopedia of Latinas and Latinos in the United States. Vargas is working on a book-length manuscript on musical performance among Texas-Mexican women in the 20th Century and has recently begun a new research project on the role of radio in creating and shaping identities among Chicano/Latino immigrants.

Assistant Professor Michael Montoya joined the UCI Departments of Chicano/Latino Studies and Anthropology in 2004 after earning a Ph.D. in Anthropology from Stanford University. Montoya researches the relationship between the expansion of scholarly knowledge on complex diseases and social disparities in access to health care. (Continued on p.2)

2006 OPEN HOUSE!

On October 5, 2006, the Department of Chicano/Latino Studies celebrated its 13th Annual Open House at the Social Science Tower courtyard. In attendance were UCI students, faculty, and administrators. As usual, it was an exciting celebration for the entire UCI community! While some enjoyed the wonderful food and conversation, others danced to the music of Frank Cano’s Latin Jazz Band.

Gilberto Q. Conchas, Associate Professor of Education, has been awarded an $80,000 grant from the Charles Stewart Mott Foundation. Dr. Conchas will examine Latino middle and high school youth’s experience in after school programs and other out-of-school activities for the next three years. He has also been awarded a visiting professorship from January through August 2007 at the Universidad Autonoma de Barcelona, Spain in the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology.

Louis DeSipio, DCLS Chair and Associate Professor of Political Science, presented his research at several universities this past fall. He presented papers on the long-term implications of the Spring 2006 immigrant rights protests at Duquesne University and the Claremont Graduate University. He also presented research findings on the cross-generational political incorporation of immigrants and their children at a Columbia University symposium. Lastly, he presented an overview of the scholarship on immigrant political and social incorporation as part of a National Academies symposium.

Raul A. Fernandez, Professor of Chicano/Latino Studies, has established the UC-CUBA Multicampus Research Program. The program is meant to enhance mutual knowledge and exchange between the U.S. and Cuba. Additionally, the program seeks to connect the UC campuses with Cuban educational and research institutions through a variety of academic activities.

Gilbert G. Gonzalez, Professor of Chicano/Latino Studies, was awarded a UC MEXUS grant of $13,500 in support of his documentary entitled “Transnational Labor Contractor: The Bracero Program.” The documentary explores how the Bracero Program affected the lives of Mexican male laborers, their families and communities, the economy of Mexico, as well as the fortunes of U. S. agribusiness. The film will also delve into other relatively unspoken issues such as widespread Bracero indebtedness, bribery and official corruption practiced on both sides of the border. Finally, the film will examine parallels between the Bracero Program, previous guest worker programs such as those implemented by Britain and France, and the currently discussed guest worker proposals.

On Veterans Day, the residents of Casa Cesar Chavez hosted high school students from Century High School. They facilitated workshops ranging from information about the A-G requirements to the Chicano Movement and the legacy of Cesar Chavez. Casa Cesar Chavez also partnered with the Global Connect program on October 18th and November 17th, welcoming AVID students from Laguna Niguel High School and Estancia High School. The residents of Casa Cesar Chavez continue to inspire many high school students’ pursuit of higher education.

"Una Casa de la Comunidad, Para la Comunidad"
2006 was a year full of accomplishments for Jody Agius, Ph.D. Candidate in the Department of Sociology. Agius received multiple grants in support of her dissertation research focusing on the Mexican-Origin Middle Class. She received grants from the National Science Foundation Dissertation Improvement Grant, UC MEXUS Dissertation Research Grant, UC Labor and Employment Research Fund, and the Graduate Student Research Fellowship with the Center for Research on Latinos in a Global Society. Lastly, in collaboration with Professor Jennifer Lee, Agius also had her first publication this past year with a piece entitled “Raising the Status of the Cashier: Latina-White Relations in an Ethnic Market.”

Angelita C. Ramirez, a UCI 2006 graduate in Criminology, Law, and Society was recently hired as a staff assistant/caseworker with U.S. Congresswoman Lucille Roybal-Allard (CA-34th District).

Roberto G. Gonzales, Ph.D. Candidate in the Department of Sociology, has received both a UC MEXUS grant and Ford Diversity Dissertation Fellowship in support of his dissertation research entitled “Born in the Shadows: The Uncertain Futures of the Children of Mexican Unauthorized Migrants.”

Juan Buriel, Ph.D. Candidate in the Department of Literature, was awarded a Ford Foundation Dissertation Fellowship in support of his dissertation research entitled “Textual Misfits: Subaltern Narratives and Chicano Representation in an Age of Multiculturalism”. Buriel also recently reviewed Salvador Plasencia’s experimental novel “The People of Paper,” which will appear in the Spring 2007 issue of Aztlán: A Journal of Chicano Studies.

Hugo I. Salazar, who graduated in June 2006 with a double major in Political Science and International Studies, was selected as a 2006 Fulbright Scholar and will be analyzing the Colombian government’s peace negotiations with insurgent groups in Bogota, Colombia.

Jose Solorio, a 1992 UCI graduate in Social Ecology, was elected to the California State Assembly. (69th District) on November 7, 2006.
